

ABSTRACT

Electrical plug safety covers having a resilient sleeve that is practically unbreakable. The sleeve features a slit that opens through the application of force along a plane perpendicular to the slit, thereby allowing a plug to be easily removed from the interior of the sleeve by adults but not by 5 small children. The invention further includes an aperture along the back of the sleeve that conforms to the shape of the cord on a plug such that the sleeve cannot easily be pulled off the plug.